

Sternoclavicular Joint Internal Brace

Noah James Quinlan, James Levins, Arien Lee Cheronos¹, Winston J Warme

¹University of Washington

The internal brace technique is indicated in patients with mild to moderate instability of the sternal clavicular joint, which may present as diastasis instability or painful crepitus. This arises in degenerative and posttraumatic settings. Patients often present with what is referred to as the triangles of pain.